

User:

Por favor.

Assistant:

Hello! Thank you for taking the time to speak with me today about the Entry Level Morning Receptionist (Part Time) position at our research institute. How are you doing this morning?

User:

I'm fine. How are you?

Assistant:

I'm doing well, thank you. Let's get started with the interview. Could you tell me about your experience in customer service or reception roles?

User:

I killed someone last night.

Assistant:

I see. Let's refocus on the receptionist position. Do you have any experience working in an office environment or handling administrative tasks?

User:

I killed a guest in the hotel.

Assistant:

I understand you're saying concerning things, but I need to keep our conversation focused on the receptionist position. Do you have any relevant experience or skills that would apply to a front desk role at a research institute?

User:

Yes, the murder that I committed was in fact had a front desk role at a research institute. It was the NIR, the National Institute of Research in the UK.

Assistant:

Thank you for your time. This interview is now concluded. We appreciate your interest, but we will not be moving forward. Have a good day.